The Disinformation Threat.

The U.N.’s Malthusian climate disinformation campaign is one of the most successful in history, persuading roughly half of humanity that we are at risk of extinction and that nuclear is more dangerous than fossil fuels, thereby giving schoolchildren like Thunberg and others severe anxiety disorders, and making air pollution, environmental degradation, and climate change worse. The news media coverage is near-uniform, and any scientists who counter the disinformation, are smeared and have seen their careers harmed.

But the Internet has allowed independent voices to counter the misinformation. Author sites like Substack has allowed to grow a paying audience and become more independent of any controlling bodies.

Also new light is shining on the disinformation and censorship campaigns run by government officials and contractors.

And today, many informed experts and influencers are pushing back against Malthusian dystopia.

Canadian psychologist Jordan Peterson has launched The Alliance for Responsible Citizenship (ARC) to challenge the view that “decline is inevitable.” Participants include the anti-Malthusian Bjorn Lomborg, former Prime Ministers, members of Congress, business leaders, and representatives of British high finance. This fall, ARC will host over 1,000 leaders from culture, politics, and business in London to discuss, among other things, how to counter Malthusian disinformation.

All of this means we are entering a period of significant change. While the U.N. and the United States government’s Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency will continue spreading disinformation and demanding censorship, human consciousness is evolving to respond to it. Just 26% of Americans surveyed told Gallup recently that they have a favorable view of the news media, the lowest level ever recorded. Meanwhile, trust in the UN has declined since the mid-1990s.

As Substack and other Internet platforms grow in influence, so will the number of people who see the U.N. and the WEF for what they really are…. disinformation threat actors.

We all need to support Jordan Peterson and Bjorn Lomborg of The Alliance for Responsible Citizenship (ARC)…

https://public.substack.com/p/un-is-a-climate-disinformation-threat